Dame Fashion keeps step with the capital's movement toward a Greater Washington.

The city's shopping sections, covering acres of space and with vast departments allotted to special features of women's apparel, substantiate the claims of local houses that every authoritative style, foreign or American, has its introduction here at the same time that it appears in New York. The woman who dresses in accordance sparkles, but for a real fad of a higher money value nothing reaches the height of popularity attained by the old-time cameo, which has been revived in all its quaintness and with artistic decorations, which are entirely new. One may choose between reproductions of antique heads, framed in twisted gold, or in modern miniatures of youthful beauty, set in filigree and encrusted with garnets, sapphires and pearls.

Another old-time favorite comes back in the shape of queer-cut coral beads and brooches.

Like the cameos they are selling far below former prices because shell cutters and coral fishers are finding customers scarce in these days of war. Also, some hunter who was stalking big game chanced on a greenstone mountain. It looks like malachite, and is just as splendid when set in frosted gold. Not being malachite it costs less.

The present exhibits of leading shoe houses contradict the advance idea that footwear was to be conservative because people who wear shoes were with the modes of the moment need no longer consult fashion magazines, or run over to see what 5th avenue is wearing; she can find what she wants right here in Washington.

Formal openings of autumn and early winter vogues are now in progress and a round of Washington's style stores will prove of illuminating interest alike to purchasers and to those who aim to keep in academic touch with every pulse beat of the day.

"Anything Becoming" Best.

"Anything becoming" is the latitude allowed in buying suits; so widely do styles range in cut and textures. With the foreknowledge that it must be trimmed with fur, and that black and white are the most distinguished contrasts in the whole gamut of the season's two-tone effects, one is otherwise at liberty to choose between velvet, corduroy or any of the countless fabrics that lend gracefully to what the cynic calls fuzzy dressing, and any of the mannish weaves that provide the rigid plainness of a pipstern. It is merely a matter of individual choice.

An exclusive garment house on F street has apotheosized the craze for black and white and fur, of course—in heavy black satin; the skirt covered a half yard deep with caracul, and with wide bands of the same fur on the

The Store That Is Different

Conservative—in that we never permit ourselves to be tempted from the exact line of quality. Aggressive—in that we fight tirelessly for the best merchandise at the bottom price. Consistent—in that we can always assure you the greatest value for the money expended. We place the highest importance upon this principle of our business.

We ask your confidence—and we guard it closely. No transaction between us is complete until you are satisfied—not merely for the time being—but in the end. And a credit system that costs you nothing—but that really does ease the buying by giving you your own convenience in paying. You see the "difference."
